La primera exposición individual de Charles Glaubitz en nuestra galería es una instalación, que se compone de más de 100 obras individuales de las categorías dibujo y pintura, todas producidas durante los años 2006 y 2007. La muestra alberga también una obra tridimensional en un espacio especial.

El tema de la exposición es igual de complejidad que su estructura física: Los Eternos. Glaubitz nos cuenta tanto de los dioses eternos de los mundos míticos como de la eternidad de la materia, que siempre vuelve a crearse de nuevo por el ciclo permanente del nacimiento y de la muerte.

Sus cuentos demuestran el gran amor del artista por nuestro planeta, cuya existencia él ve en peligro por la avidez, el egoísmo y la estupidez. Por lo tanto el mensaje de esta exposición también es político. El lenguaje fuerte de las imágenes de Glaubitz expresa una resistencia furiosa: el artista adopta una actitud intransigente frente a las condiciones de nuestra sociedad, que se dispone a destruir un planeta maravilloso. Sin embargo algunas fuerzas espirituales, inherentes a la naturaleza, ya empiezan a defenderse. En consecuencia comienzan batallas entre los diferentes poderes involucrados. Glaubitz nos lleva a mundos, donde seres encapuchados, que son miembros de asociaciones secretas, urden intrigas, roban almas o practican el lavado de cerebro.

Una pared completa, cubierta con 76 dibujos, nos muestra estos mundos, que nacen, mueren y vuelven a nacer, mostrando un nivel de desarrollo avanzado. Aparecen personajes de sus obras anteriores, p.e. "Niño Burro", que nos llevan, después de ser sometidos a un proceso de transformación, al siguiente mundo nuevo. Puede ser, que Charles Glaubitz nos parezca furioso e intransigente, pero en ningún momento es pesimista. Desde su punto de vista el pesimismo es simplemente la falta de creatividad. Nos da esperanzas: su mundo de imágenes se abre para la epifanía. Incorporada en la instalación de los dibujos presenta la pintura "Deidad 1", que nos muestra la deidad en tonos fríos gris-azules con una cabeza piramidal de ángulo agudo.

En las 9 pinturas más recientes ella aparece majestuosamente sin cara e incorpóreo en la máscara de ornamentos negros delante de un fondo del color amarillo frío. Pequeños personajes con las cabezas piramidales ya conocidas la acompañan. Son las Quarks: las más pequeñas partículas de nuestra materia, que sólo aparecen en grupos. Hasta ahora no han logrado en ningún experimento científico separarlas o destrozarlas. En el mundo mitológico de las imágenes de Charles Glaubitz son entrenadas como ayudantes y mensajeros de la deidad. En la pintura "La Teoría del Hilo" practican con un tenis hacer un nudo, que al final termina en el símbolo de infinidad. Aquí nazca un pacto con fuerzas nuevas: la epifanía acaba en el acto secular del conocerse a si mismo. Las partes espirituales de nuestra existencia deberían mostrarnos el camino, que nos conducirá a la salida de la miseria. ¿Vamos a lograrlo? Esperemos los próximos capítulos de la historia, que Charles Glaubitz nos presentará como siempre llenos de mensajes fuertes.

Charles Glaubitz' first solo show at our gallery is an installation that comprises of more than 100 individual works of the categories painting and drawing, which were all created during 2006 and 2007. The selection of exhibits also includes a three-dimensional work mounted in a special space.

The subject of the exhibition is equally complex as its physical structure: The Eternals. Glaubitz talks as well of the eternal gods of mythical worlds as of the eternity of the matter, which in the cycle of death and birth constantly recreates itself.

His stories tell us about the love that he feels for our planet, whose existence the artist sees in danger by greed, egoism and ignorance. In this sense the message of this exhibition is also a political one.

Glaubitz' images have a tremendous power of expression which reveals rage: the artist demonstrates an intransigent attitude regarding the actual conditions of our society, which is on the point of destroying a wonderful planet. However, spiritual powers inherent in nature begin to defend themselves. Consequently fights start between the different powers involved. Glaubitz guides us through worlds where hooded beings, which are members of secret societies, conspire, rob souls or practice brainwashing.

A wall with 76 drawings presents us these worlds, which are born, die and are reborn again on a more advanced level of development. Characters and figures of his former works appear such as "Niño Burro" (Donkey Boy), which will lead us after being transformed into new beings to a next, a better world. Glaubitz may appear furious and unforgiving, but he is definitely not pessimistic. From his point of view pessimism simply means the lack of creativity. He gives us hope: his world of images opens up for the epiphany. Incorporated into the installation of drawings is the painting "Deidad 1" (Deity 1), which shows the deity in cool gray-blue color tones with an acute-angled, pyramid shaped head.

On the 9 most recent paintings the deity appears magisterially, bodiless and faceless, in the mask of black ornaments on a cold yellow background. It is accompanied by small creatures with the already known acute-angled, pyramid shaped heads. These are the Quarks: the smallest particles of our matter, which appear only in groups. Up to now in no scientific experiment they could neither be separated nor broken down into pieces. In Charles Glaubitz' mythological image world they are trained as helpers and messengers of the deity. The painting "La Teoría del Hilo" (The Theory of the Thread) shows them practicing with a sneaker to bind shoelaces, which finally turn into the symbol of infinity. Here a pact with new powers arises: the epiphany leads into the secular act of self-knowledge. The elements of our spiritual existence will show us the path that guides us out of misery. Will this be successful? Let's wait for the next chapters of this story, which Charles Glaubitz will definitely present us with the usual strength of his messages.

ART REVIEW

OF MICE AND MEN

Charles Glaubitz's cosmic, comic imagery lights up 'Los Eternos (The Eternals)'

By Robert L. Pincus
ART CRITIC

Some artists just have to create an alternate world and even a cosmology to explain the invented universe. Outsider artists like the late Henry Darger led the way in this category. He made thousands of images and also wrote thousands of pages about a world dominated by a fictive war in which his heroines, the Vivian Girls, were often under siege.

The same impulse for historical and cosmic sweep takes a vivid form in "Los Eternos (The Eternals)," Charles Glaubitz's solo exhibition at the Galeria H&H in Tijuana. Some of his "characters" have made appearances in earlier shows: a mutant Mickey Mouse, who resembles a rat as much as a mouse; El Niño Burro, a kind of boy knight in donkey suit; quasi-psychadelic deities; and a race of small beings with pyramidal heads called Quarkies (potential stand-ins for us).

All of the imagery, consistent with Glaubitz's earlier work, is done with a jaunty comic sensibility, even when he's focusing on the damage being done to the world by a feverish pace of consumerism. His mouse figure is the chief emblem of this damage. He gets prominent space in a grid of many drawings, and these images are a good place for the viewer to begin. Glaubitz seems to agree, judging by their collective title: "La Fuente (The Source)."

Glaubitz's mouse has become "The Capitalist King" in the first drawing. Writing within the image declares that if he doesn't get what he wants, he starts an embargo or war. (Parallels with contemporary events are clearly intended.)

There is no united narrative. The effect is of a collage of visual vignettes. The Niño Burro is a hero again, sacrificing himself to save nature from the ravages of a society run by the likes of the greedy mouse.

Perusing the drawings, you'll see Glaubitz switches from English to Spanish and back again as you move from panel to panel. This isn't simply some nod toward bilingualism.

Glaubitz himself is genuinely a man of both American and Mexican cultures. He is a native of Tijuana who was born to a Mexican mom and an American dad with German roots; he now lives in Tijuana with his wife and daughter. He got his BFA at the California College of Arts and Crafts in San Francisco and teaches at San Diego City College. He also has exhibited more frequently in the States than in Mexico, and his illustrations have appeared in Rolling Stone and Nickelodeon magazine, among others.

The drawings in "El Fuente" offer some imagery similar to that of his illustrations. Much of the rest of the exhibition, with its focus on gods and Quarkies, creates his absurdist cosmology.

"Deidad 1 (Deity 1)" resembles a Quarkie on stilts, a god created in the image of his worshippers. Most of the deity figures, though, have a different look: faces like tapestries with their features embedded in geometric designs. Each figure is set against a yellow backdrop, as if this universe is more intensely illuminated than ours.

These gods are odd. One is dropping giant fried eggs on the Quarkies below, in "Huevos fritos (Fried Eggs)." Another, a bulging form with winglike appendages and a vaginal orifice, has seemingly spewed brightly colored toy balls across the landscape in "The Soft Machine ("La máquina blanda")."

Everything is rendered with an illustrator's precision and an eccentric visionary's outlook. At moments, you're not sure Glaubitz means to be serious or ironic, but it seems to be part of his purpose to walk a sharp edge between the two.

This ambiguity is consistent. In the installation "Niño indigo (Indigo Child)," a kind of finale, he fills a patio with actual toy balls and flat cloth circles in the same hues. Floating above them is a stuffed cloth blue infant in the Quarkie style. It reads as a Glaubitz-style version of the appearance of a holy child. Perhaps he's arrived to help out El Niño Burro in the effort to save nature and us from our voracious ways, but the story in "Los Eternos" is open-ended.

The title of "The Soft Machine (La máquina blanda)" borrows from the title of a William Burroughs novel, but Charles Glaubitz's imaginary world is far less nightmarish than that of the iconic Beat novelist. Galeria H&H
